'review of warships of the ussr and russia 1945 1995' books
May 28th, 2020 - there has actually been little history written on this topic outside of the ussr and its allies so what was going on in the black sea around the world it appears russia is securing its flanks with missile batteries that have a long reach out to sea and even in some cases deep island
It seems there is a lot of extraneous text and quotations that are not part of the main content. The main content appears to be about the Soviet navy and its battleships during World War II. Here is a summary:

- The Soviet navy was small and paratival during World War II, but it played a significant role in battles.
- The navy participated in most of the battlefronts with the joint efforts of the army.
- The navy was represented by Lieutenant General Kuzma Derevyanko, who signed Japan's Instrument of Surrender.
- The AT Black Sea and the Baltic until 1945 saw a rapid production decline, but the navy was still an asset that Stalin used on a larger scale than the Kriegsmarine in 1941.
- The US Navy and the Soviet Navy in WW2 were often influenced by Italian designs.
- The first Italian Dreadnought, Dante Alighieri, was commissioned on May 31, 1917.
- Russian and Soviet battleships were often equipped with some sort of radar.
